June To-Do's:

Summer is almost here, and it is starting to feel like it with all this warm weather. It's a time to enjoy being outside with family and friends, and also to celebrate our fathers for Father's Day!

Fathers are the easiest people to track down in our research, cause their names don't often change. But they can still prove to be a challenge if they move around a lot, or have several different wives over the course of their lives.

Finding our Fathers

Finding the male ancestors in our family may be easy at first. But there are always a few men who are not so easy to find. Or they have a common name that lots of people had in the town they lived in.

How can we figure out which person is our ancestor, with only limited resources?

Men also were involved in the military, and we can learn a lot by finding their military records. Women were not allowed in the military till June 1948. Addresses, names of other family members, occupation and physical attributes can all be found in these records.
